

How The Job Market Is Changing Now That Things Are Opening Again In The UK?

As of April 2021, new cases of coronavirus are reaching a new height globally and the pandemic is still far from over, but our society is slowly adjusting. We are starting to embrace new changes in our lifestyle, and some of them might be permanent. This year we will start to see new recoveries, as consumers are buying, and businesses are hiring again.

If you are looking for a new job, there are some important changes in the UK job market that you need to consider:

Healthcare- UK consumers are getting more health-conscious and they will use health services more. With many beds being occupied by coronavirus patients, hospitals and other health facilities are expanding. They are hiring more doctors, nurses, administration staff, and other job roles in the hospital.

Distribution- while many shops and stores were forced to close last year, consumers relied more on online distribution channels. Although stores are starting to reopen this year, many UK customers have realised the convenience of online buying. There are many job opportunities related to goods distribution, including warehouse staff, truck drivers, and other related job roles.

Artificial Intelligence In Recruitment Process- AI and machine learning make computer systems smarter. This means, more businesses and recruiters in the UK will use AI when processing applications. It is important for job seekers to optimise their CV to have better success with the AI-based recruitment process. AI-based systems may also perform pre-recorded interviews as initial screenings. When answering verbally to the computer, job seekers should focus on important and relevant keywords.

Digital Skills- businesses and consumers started to use digital technology a lot more as a solution during the lockdowns last year. Even for non-technical roles like truck drivers and nurses, recruiters may require increased digital skills. Employees and workers need to use digital devices for better collaborations. Regardless of your role, it is important acquire new digital skills and get certified. Recruiters will focus on the management skills, flexibility, problem-solving, ability to adapt and interpersonal skills. These important skills are easier to achieve if you have adequate digital qualifications.

Remote Working- businesses may allow more and more employees to work remotely from home. Job seekers should show to recruiters that they have a dedicated office area at home, and that they are capable of working from home productively and efficiently.

Contact Stanley Staff

To learn more, contact Stanley Staff today and speak with a staffing representative who can answer any questions you might have.

If you enjoyed this article, please feel free to share it on your favourite social media sites.